Across the Bloody Chasm.

At the re-union of the Army of officers of the Federal army. The annual oration was delivered by Gen.

And now, comrades, citizens of seek to keep alive even so much as former enemies of the South-citizens still, though they were enemies ed us? We are the offspring of the same gallant ancestors, and nurturare twin brethren, and now that the sectional bondage has been crossed and our wanderings in the civil war ended, why shall we not enter hand in hand into the promised land of perpetual peace? Gallantly the spirited Southron struggled in the Lost Cause." Our victory was over no mean foe, and for no sinister purpose. It has given us-given the whole people of the Union-the mightiest material empire, the freest people, the grandest future that Heaven has ever vouchsafed to any nation. Nor has cruelty sullied the triumph of the victor. No rebel cans may fall by the sword, but they never perish by the axe. To pass the vanquished under the voke was tiquity, but how much nobler in the heroes of Christian conquest to extend the olive branch. The Centennial Birthday of Inde pendence will soon dawn upon us. On that natal morn let the South and the North sit down together on the old benches in Independence Hall and take the sacrament of reconciliation. Let us of the Union armies invite our secession foes to meet us at the ancient fane of freedom, and there in the holy ground consecrated to brotherly love, bury our dead him of the North bring with him the memories of Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Brandywine, and all the venerable traditions of the olden time. Let him of the South come with the proud historic contributions of his sunny land to the volume of his nation's glory. And there let us both with clasped hands lay down together our offerings on the altar of our common country, and in the presence of God and myriads of assembled freemen, by the memory of our fathers and the hopes of our childter's Quarry, under the city of Je- The Evils of Profanity --- An Open Let- ren to the latest generation, swear to preserve forever Liberty, Frater-
